To the committee,

s201. Property vested in trusts over that time scale is like, British soldiers massacring aboriginal people, taking their land, placing it in a trust then their great great great grandkids live off the wealth generated by those properties. The beneficiaries of those trusts like to allude to the idea that the property is always changing hands and has been bought and resold on the basis of hard honest individualist labor over the centuries. So people with a mortgage indentify with and think their situation is similar to the trusts that own property collecting the rents from all the commercial real estate in the Brisbane CBD. There is land in Meanjin and the surrounding area sitting in trusts that has been there since great great great grandad stepped off a boat with his Flintlock Blunderbuss.

omit/insert

property held by a trust but not vested by a trust since before the time of federation to immediately be vested in a trust for the benefit of the traditional owners.
