The current state of volunteering in Queensland seems to be healthy but not for profit organisations determine this by the culture or setting they provide for volunteers. Legislative and regulatory burdens can be challenging for volunteers, but it is obvious they are there to protect the volunteers themselves and are a necessary evil. Volunteer experiences are typically governed by the environment they are in. Volunteer leaders regulate this. I believe volunteering can be ingrained in youth through schools integrating with volunteer groups. Volunteering becomes a way of life, and we best learn these lifestyles at a young age,
