Hello I'm a mum and I'm a huge road safety and always trying to help teach in a way that reminds children which side of the road and a lot of the time it does start with following their parents and seeing them that helmet is a tragic shot. I know a lot of a young writers high school age on the e-bikes don't actually know the rules because they've never done road learning so their road safety is quite low. They don't know which side of the road to be on. They don't understand things like we do because we have lost them. I feel like a little bit of school education. The road safety should come into play better for our children and their knowledge and also prepare them for their learners test, we can always try push for e- bikes to be a more legalised vehicle just like mobility scooters and motorbikes of all kinds by making sure that they have indicators, lights and horn etc. Whatever it is that the government needs to approve them so that license adult can still enjoy their e-bikes that all the crazy restrictions just because teenagers miss using them Thank you
