Mobility scooters also need to be included in any review. Some of those go as fast as the e-scooters and e-bikes. And no, despite being driven by a more mature age group the same disdain for pedestrians is prevalent. They don't sound hoens, regularly go roaring past with mm to spare due to the width of their scooters, and flat out seems to be the only speed many of them know. Right of way is seized irrespective of safety concerns at traffic lights and pedestrian crossings. Many just spring out in front of cars without any indication they intend to use the crossing. No I haven't nearly hit them but I've been close to witnessing a dozen near misses in the last 12 months. Pity help the driver who does collect them because many abrogate their own personal safety because they think they're immune. I'm over 60 too and flabbergasted that their attitude is as cavalier as a teens.
