Children 15 and above should be able to ride e-mobility devices. They are allowed to ride bicycles on main roads. Safety courses should be made freely available as well as maintenance and prevention workshops, so young owners learn to properly care and maintain their devices. Children riding safely and responsibly should not be breaking the law. Only riders that are clearly not being responsible, inconsiderate, or taking unnecessary risks or being a nuisance to the public should be approached by law authorities. These riders should be made to do compulsory riders training and be put on probation. I have 2 young riders, and I would personally remove their access to their e-mobility devices if they were ever using them inappropriately. They are horrified when they see others clearly spoiling it for those who are using their e-mobility devices safely and respectfully.
