E-bikes are motorized vehicles which must conform to Australian standards to be legally sold in this country. They must be registered and the rider must have third party insurance and a motorcycle license. Parents must be held accountable for encouraging their children to use these vehicles without any knowledge of road safety. A compulsory bicycle helmet will not save the riders life when travelling at high speed. Parents are putting their children's lives at risk by not having to transport their children to and from school and other activities. Because e-bikes run silently they should not be allowed on the footpaths. Members of the public are putting themselves at risk by having to confront disrespectful children and adolescents who ride these bikes irresponsibly and at high speeds
