PMD are obviously popular and are here to stay. I don't think licensing and registration is a viable solution to the problems they present particularly on footpaths due to the admin burden of doing that. When sharing footpaths with pedestrians they need to be speed limited and potentially separated if there is room. Regulation and standards need to apply to imports and I think monitoring and enforcement is the key on the ground. Riders need to wear helmets and abide by relevant laws. Police can't do this all so I think Council rangers and other officials need to be authorised to enforce the laws/regulations that apply to PMD. Thanks
