For far too long, animals, namely wild animals, have borne the brunt of our increasing demands on their habitat and indeed their sovereignty. Many have been amazingly adaptive, but there is only so much they can do on their own. They need our collective caring, which will, of itself, lead to affirmative action. I'm optimistic that this review will have a ripple effect across all Australian states and territories. There are many, many aspects of animal cruelty for you to consider, and perhaps one less known, is glue traps. I re-iterate the words of others: they are currently easily available, and people don't use them properly, or check them often, leaving animals to die a long painful death; they are inhumane and indiscriminate. I want glue traps banned. Thank you for considering my submission.
