Submitter Comments:

The glue traps in question sound like a good idea for a non chemical alternative for cockroaches. Until you check them and find lizards and crickets and you know they died painfully. We pride ourselves in our gardens to provide an area for lizards to breed and have rocks to warm up on we have skinks, blue tongues and common garden lizards. These insidious traps need to be taken from the market and legislation put in place to prevent mass extermination of these sub species that help keep our gardens clean. Thanks for your consideration of our ideas. regards Bob Quigg and family
