Subject: Collection of Toll

Dear [REDACTED]

What does the committee know of the only legal method of collecting the toll as laid down in the Australian Constitution? It is not widely known that the only legal method is by coin at the beginning of a toll way. If they fail to collect by this method there is no way they can pursue the matter to collect at a later date. That toll is lost.

The company cannot pursue the matter through any court and expect to win if the Australian Constitution is quoted in the correct context.

I am not against paying my way as I do through the post office in advance, topping up in the previous Go-Card method in advance.

If I accidentally let this laps, I would no doubt be pursued for any supposedly owed money and this would be strictly illegal by law.

The company would threaten legal action or bully me into paying up so called arrears, with cost's. All illegal.

It would be accidental and knowing as much as I do, I am afraid I would not be bullied to pay up and would certainly open up a can of worms through the courts.

Can the committee comment on this?

Looking forward to your answer.

Best Regards,

Albert Webb
