FAMILY AND CHILD COMMISSION BILL

Introduction

 Hon. JP BLEIJIE (Kawana—LNP) (Attorney-General and Minister for Justice) (4.12 pm): I present a bill for an act to establish the Queensland Family and Child Commission and for related purposes, to amend the Public Service Act 2008 and to make consequential amendments to this act and other legislation stated in schedule 1. I table the bill and the explanatory notes.

Tabled paper: Family and Child Commission Bill 2014 [4717].

Tabled paper: Family and Child Commission Bill 2014, explanatory notes [4718].

I am pleased to introduce the Family and Child Commission Bill 2014, one of the three bills that comprise the initial stage of this government's reforms to build a new child and family support system in Queensland over the next 10 years. The bill establishes the Queensland Family and Child Commission, amends the Public Service Act 2008 and makes consequential and minor amendments to other legislation as stated in schedule 1.

One of the findings of the Queensland Child Protection Commission of Inquiry was that the current layers of oversight were at the expense of delivering services to the public and reforms were needed which take into account and manage risk in a new and different way. The commission of inquiry recommended that it was time to place appropriate levels of responsibility on each department responsible for child protection to avoid duplication and to use resources efficiently. Currently, the Commission for Children and Young People and Child Guardian, or CCYPCG, carries out a range of functions including individual advocacy for children, working with children checks, investigations and monitoring of complaints, review of child deaths and is the oversight body for the child protection system.

The commission identified that the CCYPCG is no longer required in its current form and that its functions should be performed by other entities. The commission of inquiry proposed the establishment of a new entity, the family and child council, to provide systemic oversight of the child protection system and to coordinate research, with remaining functions being transferred to other entities. All other Australian jurisdictions, except for South Australia, have a commissioner for children, rather than the family and child council. As such, the bill establishes the new entity as the Queensland Family and Child Commission. This ensures that Queensland is aligned with other jurisdictions, and that issues pertaining to children and young people are accorded significant and equal status to that demonstrated across the rest of the country.

The Queensland Family and Child Commission will be a statutory body reporting directly to the Premier. It will provide systemic oversight for the child protection system, including secondary family services to vulnerable children and young people and their families. The bill transfers the current CCYPCG functions of systemic oversight, research and maintaining a child death register to the new Queensland Family and Child Commission.

The Queensland Family and Child Commission will have two commissioners with at least one commissioner being an Aboriginal person or Torres Strait Islander. One of the commissioners will be a principal commissioner for the purpose of overall management of the Family and Child Commission. In exercising its functions, the Queensland Family and Child Commission will be required to ensure the interests of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders are adequately and appropriately represented, and will be required to report on the outcomes of actions taken to reduce overrepresentation and to improve outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, children and young people.

The Queensland Family and Child Commission will be independent from line agencies and will provide the cross-sectoral leadership required to successfully deliver a new child protection system for Queensland. The primary mechanism through which stakeholders will be involved in the strategic work will be through the establishment of one or more advisory councils.

The Queensland Family and Child Commission will provide systemic oversight of the child protection system delivered by public sector and publicly funded non-government agencies providing child safety services or support to families. The bill provides that its functions will include driving best practice in the provision of services, by developing a workforce development strategy, coordinating a research program, and by evaluating the performance at a systemic level.

The Queensland Family and Child Commission will also have a key role to inform and educate families and communities about their responsibility for protecting and caring for their children. The Queensland Family and Child Commission will have an important role in coordinating efforts across government and non-government agencies and in strengthening the capacity of the sector through collaboration and information sharing.

The bill proposes that the Queensland Family and Child Commission will report annually to the Premier on its functions and the performance of the child protection system. The bills underpin this government's objectives to build a sustainable and effective child protection system for the future. I commend the bill to the House.
